

David Wall Rice is currently a professor of psychology at Morehouse College where he leads the Identity Orchestration Research Lab, a strengths-based lab that works to understand and to elicit behavioral bests. This emphasis on positives is an approach that frames David's work beyond the academy. As a trained journalist and research scientist, David writes and speaks extensively on youth culture, music culture, media, politics, psychology and faith. He counts among his greatest achievements his consistent work with and for people from places of affirmation. "I appreciate and respect the access that starting from positive spaces can yield," says Rice. "This doesn't mean that we ignore the negatives, it means that we begin with a positive to get a positive.

Presently David is Contributor to the national morning news program The Takeaway, and serves on the Editorial Advisory Board for The Journal of Popular Culture. David has also provided commentary for major networks, newspapers, magazines, has written peer-reviewed journal articles, book chapters, and is writing his second book for Rowman & Littlefield Publishers entitled, I Ain't No Joke: Identity orchestration through the narratives of hip-hop lyricism. David's current research looks at identity and the self within the recast social context of the "Obama Era," and the psychology of strength as informed by study in Israel, Ghana and Haiti.
